

If we would have powerful minds we must think; if we would have faithful hearts we must love; if we would have vigorous muscles we must labor; and these three—thought, love, labor—include all that is valuable in life.

Parting and forgetting! What faithful heart can do those? Our great thoughts, our great affections, the truths of our life never leave us. Surely they cannot separate from our consciousness; shall follow it whithersoever that shall go, and are of their nature divine and immortal.

Among the striking sights of New York are those to be seen at the docks. It is interesting to look at a steamship load of Americans bound for Europe as to look at a steamship load of European immigrants coming to port. The outward bound Americans are apt to be less picturesque in their garb than the incoming foreigners.

This wild rush for the possession of cheap lands, land, to be fertile is a phenomenon due to several and varied impulses. These land grabbers are many of them uneducated and some of them unscrupulous for agricultural pursuits eager to begin a pastoral existence.

Cultivated people are apt to deprecate the value of great things. The vulgar glory in them, and there is a tendency to draw from them that inference that it is more idling to watch them. So it is idling for idlers but not for intelligent observers. Where there is a spectacle there is a crowd, and people of delicate habits crowd. But crowds are good to study, particularly representative crowds of intelligent men under the stress of strong emotion.

The claims of the scientific preparation of food for universal feeding are pretty well established. Women who do not fully understand its principles themselves are sending their daughters and their servants to cooking classes, and the teaching of the elements of cookery in public and reformatory schools is being adopted more and more generally. Sanitation, as a popular study, is a little behind cookery, but its turn has come, and it will never again be universally neglected.

The public school system is of paramount importance to our country. Everybody is interested in its success, and either directly or indirectly, is connected with the great educational system. What are the teachers doing? Are they running through the same old run year after year, or are they devoting their spare hours to the consideration and elevation of their profession? These questions are frequently asked by citizens who have of public instruction.

Professors embrace the wide sphere of human existence, they take all the colors of life, they are often exquisite strokes of genius, they delight by the airy sarcasm of their caustic satire, the luxuriance of their humor, the playfulness of their imagery, and the tenderness of their sentiment. They give a deep insight into domestic life, and open for us the heart of man in all the various states which may occur. A frequent review of proverbs should enter into our readings; and although they are no longer the ornaments of conversation they have not ceased to be the treasure of thought.

The art of money-getting, according to the late P. T. Barnum, is summed up hereunder: "Don't drink; don't abuse your business; don't mistake your pocket; select the right location; avoid debt; persevere; whatever you do, do with all your might; depend upon your own personal exertions; use the best tools; don't scatter your powers; be systematic; read the newspapers; beware of out side operations; don't endorse without good security; advertise your business; be polite and kind to your customers; be charitable; don't let what you are going to do, and preserve your integrity."

Domestic sanitation is one of those very important details of family life which, like cookery, has suffered from the fact that it had to exist, but was good in some sort. The grievous abuses which are to be found in many families considering themselves well regulated, such as bad ventilation, insufficient drains, defective traps and other similar evils, belong to the same order of human misfortunes as the lack of money, the lack of health, the lack of a good wife, the lack of a good husband, the lack of a good home, the lack of a good life, the lack of a good death, the lack of a good resurrection, the lack of a good heaven, the lack of a good hell, the lack of a good everything.

Even in private life, where sweetness of disposition and complaisance of habit are of prime importance, a swaying backbone, over-supply is a nuisance rather than a pleasure. Tyrants alone like to live with slaves; but even they will compound for the shock to their dignity given by the insubordination of a rebel, for the pleasure they have in crushing him. But not the hardest-hearted husband—not the most self-willed wife likes to feel that the "environment" in which he or she lives is nothing but a vast anarchy mass of jelly—a slimy slippery substance which yields on all sides and takes no permanent shape—which has no form and no color and no independent life of its own, but is just a slippery slimy mass to be run into any mould that is desired.

Adlai E. Stevenson of Illinois Receives Second Place by Acclamation.

THE DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM IN FULL.

The Wildest Excitement Prevails Throughout the Proceedings. The Vote by States.

FIRST DAY.

CHICAGO, Ill., June 21.—A circus tent, trebly magnified, with a dozen huge white pennants stretched from covering to floor. That was the appearance of the big Democratic wigwag when the Democratic national convention assembled to-day. The supposed pennants were in reality iron poles, supporting the mainmast circular canopy in the skies which was in reality a substantial roof of wood, raised to admit light and air. Delegates and visitors began gathering at an early hour, when the convention was called to order by the tremendous wigwag was packed to its full capacity. Chairman Bruce of the national committee at 12:40 p. m. dropped the gavel on the desk and the Democratic convention of 1892 was declared open for business. When quiet was secured Rev. John H.

tioned from ever having an opportunity to exercise their ingenuity in the line of Senator Palmer's warning. Hon. William L. Wilson of West Virginia was admitted by the convention to the speech of his life in assuming the gavel as permanent chairman of the convention, which was followed by tremendous applause. Clardy of Missouri offered a resolution which was unanimously adopted, thanking Temporary Chairman Owens for the able and impartial manner in which he had discharged his duties. Having disposed of the temporary chairman, the convention proceeded to business. The report of the committee on rules was the first to be considered, and English of Indiana presented a report recommending the following order of business: Report of the committee on resolutions and platform nomination of candidates for president of the United States; nomination of candidates for vice president of the United States; nomination of candidates for electors of the electoral college; and nomination of candidates for members of the national committee.

The next order of business was the report of the committee on resolutions, which was unanimously adopted. The New York Syracuse delegates were refused seats. The Utah contest was decided unanimously in favor of the sitting delegates. Henry P. Henderson and John G. Cain. This fight was precisely similar to the Utah contest at Minneapolis. In Cincinnati John Leonard was elected against Hill, and in the Democratic convention of 1892, the committee was unanimous in its favor. The sitting members also retained their seats in the twenty-third Pennsylvania congressional district. The Kolb Alabama contested election was given over to the committee. The chairman was presented with gavel and by Mr. Phelps of Missouri, bearing the inscription "We need no protection. Ex- Gov. C. Campbell addressed the convention by invitation and was escorted to the platform to the time of "The Campbells are coming."

Adjoined until 5 p. m. The crowd at the convention was the largest ever gathered in the city. The great throng, however, subsided when at 5:15 o'clock Chairman Wilson invited the delegates to the platform. that these principles be applied to the conduct of the federal government, through accession to power of the party that advocates them, and we solemnly declare the need of a return to these principles as a condition of true popular government, based on home rule and individual liberty, never more to be lost, than when the tendency to centralize all power at the federal capital has become so strong that the states are reduced to mere creatures of the central government.

senior Boies' consent to taking the second place, but no answer had been received up to the time of the assembling of the convention. Springfield of Illinois was the manager of Stevenson's forces, and before the convention met had a long conference with Croker, Croker and others in the line of his campaign for the Illinois. Texas, too, continued to support Stevenson, while Ohio did the same. Iowa decided to compliment Henry Waterson with her twenty-five votes, and as it was not yet time for the election of delegates, each one swinging one way or the other until it seemed as though there would be more of a contest over the tall than the head of the ticket. The delegates from the various states were called to order by Chairman Wilson, who introduced Rev. Thos. Grace, who offered prayer, after which the chairman announced that the next order of business was the nomination of a candidate for the office of vice-president of the United States and directed the clerk to call the roll. At the suggestion of Mr. Porter of Tennessee, nominating speakers were called to the platform to deliver addresses. Two Gov. Gray was placed before the convention by John E. Lamb of Indiana. Nicholas K. Worthington of Illinois and Allen B. Morse of Michigan by Thomas M. Cooley of that state. After the usual complimentary remarks, nominations closed and balloting commenced. In the roll call, the delegates from Iowa gained the floor and changed her twenty-six votes to Stevenson; Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, Oregon, Missouri, Georgia, Tennessee, Kentucky and Kentucky, and well as the delegates from their votes to the Illinois and then Col. of Ohio moved that the roles be suspended and Stevenson nominated by acclamation. Horace H. Pennington, secretary of the convention, seconded the motion, and in an instant it was carried with a tremendous chorus of ayes. The band played "Hail to the Chief," and the universal howl from the crowd in honor of the resolution lasted for some time. A resolution was then adopted empowering the national committee to fix the time and place for the next national convention, making the basis of representation the same as in the present one. The next resolution, thanking Chairman Wilson, was adopted. P. A. Collins putting the motion in place of the resolution of the national committee was authorized and empowered to select a chairman and also an executive committee chairman from persons outside of the national committee if they so desired. Gen. Col. of Ohio moved the chair and taking the custom strongly urged the adoption of the following resolution: Resolved, That the Democratic national committee be authorized to provide for the next national convention, the same to be held at such place and time as the national committee may deem proper.

OUR ST. LOUIS LETTER.

The Furniture Workers' Convention to Be Held in the Mount City on Wednesday.

Not only did the convention of Furniture workers in Cincinnati decide to hold the next convention in St. Louis, but two of the officers were given to that city. The president is Morton N. Harris of St. Louis and the secretary and treasurer, James A. Beards of St. Louis. The convention was a mutual one, and was composed of some of the most substantial business men of the country. St. Louis was chosen over all the other large cities which were in nomination because of its central position, and its accessibility both by railroads and water. Numbers of men and wagons were on the site of the new Union depot this week. The company which had the wrecking contract announced by an advertisement that all the rest of the buildings now standing on the site were to be torn down rapidly and must be got out of the way at once. The people rushed there to buy cheap food and building material, and whole houses were sold for a song, to be carried off to city yards and sold for a song. THE "WESTERN SONGMEN."

Medieval Melodies Handed Down From Father to Son.

In the English Illustrated Magazine Baring Gould gives an interesting glimpse of the "Western Songmen" who are now nearly extinct—men who kept in their secret lives the songs of the Western folk, and liked nothing better than to tell them out on a winter night before a huge fire with the assistance of copious draughts of one ambrosia or another. Such men were common enough when Baring Gould was a boy; but it was not until he recently inquired around Dartmoor that he found any survivors of them.
